Pophal Reloaded: Handwriting as Brainwriting in Light of Recent Research in Neuroscience, Psychology, and Graphology

Saturday, October 20, 2018

12:00 pm EST (New York time). Concluding at 1:30 pm EST.

Online at 11:45 am EST for technical support/introductions

Recent research studies imply a possible improvement of the old theory of the physician and graphologist Rudolf Pophal, based on the neuroscience of that period. During recent decades, more and more his theory has been rejected and even ruled out by many modern graphologists. We will present the new PSI – Psychic System's Interaction - Model established by Julius Kuhl from Germany, based on recent studies in neuroscience, neurophysiology, and psychology, conceived by the author as the "Quadrifocal Brain." This furnishes a very handy model to renew the theory of Pophal, still quite useful, well known and practiced by many European graphologists since 1940. She will explain with handwriting examples how to better understand the important role and modern concept of tension in handwriting. She will also discuss a possible implementation of the new model in handwriting analysis and its impact on the daily work of the practitioner.

Just published: Handwriting Research, Validation and Quality, editors: Yury Chernov & Marie Anne Nauer. Can be purchased on Amazon.com. Our Facebook page has more detail.
